WHAT TO LOOK FORWARD TO IN 2022

by Yannick Coulange, Managing Director for PageGroup Switzerland

Dear Readers,
The good news is that the economy has picked up since the worst of the pandemic, with expected GDP and advertised jobs setting new records. But there are new developments which make attracting and retaining talent increasingly challenging. Accelerated business transformation combined with technological developments has led to a skills shortage is many fields. The pandemic has taken its toll on employees who have undertaken a widespread assessment about priorities. Demographic change is leading to a tightening of the candidate pool, and a record number of employees, $40 \%$, are in the process of quitting their jobs or thinking about doing so according to the latest international research by Microsoft. The term "burn out" is frequently used to cover a range of issues. Based on our experience, the key drivers are a combination of post-lockdown effects and difficulties for leadership to address the situation. For these reasons, attracting and retaining talent has become more complex.

Looking ahead, it is imperative to have upskilling and reskilling programmes in place. According to the World Economic Forum around $40 \%$ of workers will require reskilling of six months and CEOs expect that 94\% of employees will pick up new skills on the job. The Michael Page Candidate Pulse Studies show that opportunities for training and development are key factors in attracting candidates. Unfortunately, less than half of managers (39\%) discuss training with their employees. As a result, they are potentially missing out or losing good candidates.

Editorial

For employers this means having to embrace a different mindset and being open to fundamentally new ways of doing things. For example, embracing diversity in your recruitment programmes to access all available talent will be a necessity. More than ever, it is important to create an environment where employees feel they are listened to and there is acceptance about showing vulnerabilities - from both managers and employees. Employers need to find out why people want to leave by opening the conversation, employees are more likely to share their concerns, stay and jointly navigate a pathway to change. This is especially important for younger generations who might be intimidated about talking to their managers in this way.
Offering different types of employment will also be critical for attracting and retaining talent. This includes full-time, part-time, interim and temporary work as well as remote, office and hybrid options. Indeed, employers can no longer expect their teams to be back in the office 100\% of the time or they risk losing employees in search of more flexibility. Many employees have discovered that they are happy to work on an interim basis. This is a win-win situation enabling employers to quickly scale-up on major projects, with specific expertise and/ or cover long absences such as parental leave or sabbaticals.
Attracting and retaining talent will continue to be a challenge in 2022. However, implementing a diverse recruitment strategy, offering a flexible working environment, enabling employees to have authentic conversations about their career plans as well as upskilling and reskilling them, will help you win the war for talent.

In addition to general market trends that seem to emerge in Switzerland in this post pandemic era, our team at Michael Page Switzerland has spent the past year interviewing clients and candidates to identify the new tendencies in terms of skills and salaries for 453 positions across 11 sectors. I hope you find interest and insight in this guide whether it is to make optimal business decisions as an employer or as a chance to assess your value on the job market as a candidate.

Wishing you a great read!
Best Regards

Yannick Coulange

OUR 5 COMMITMENTS

SWITZERLAND'S JOB MARKET IN 2022

According to key economic sources, Switzerland's job market will continue to grow in 2022 while undergoing significant change. The Consensus Forecast from the Economic Research Centre at ETH estimates economic growth at $2.9 \%$ in 2022, which is higher than pre-Covid levels. The Michael Page Swiss Job Index shows that the growth trend has already commenced. Advertised jobs grew by $+34.9 \%$ between January and October 2021. This growth is double that of pre-Covid times.

The workforce transformation will be significant but the level of new types of jobs created will exceed those for which there is limited demand. According to the Deloitte's "Voice of the Workforce Switzerland" study, an average of 41,000 new jobs are created every month in Switzerland compared with 38,000 that disappear and this trend will continue in 2022. Different sectors and job categories will be impacted at varying rates. Planned increases in Swiss-based production capacity, process re-engineering and automation as well as enhanced export markets will continue to drive strong demand for engineers - especially in the robotics field - technicians, IT specialists, logistics and supply chain managers.

New job categories are also being created. For example, sustainable advertised jobs, such as environmental scientists and bio-fuel traders grew by nearly 10\% between January and October 2021 (Source: Michael Page Swiss Job Index). Likewise in the Healthcare & Lifesciences segment digitised medicine and new regulations associated with enhanced medical technologies are creating new roles.

Meanwhile other jobs are being transformed with technological developments such as process automation and big data analytics. For example, in the field of procurement and supply chain management (PSC), these types of tools are helping managers to improve supply chain resilience in a volatile market. This includes helping them to redesign and better integrate the multiple functions, including logistics, production, procurement, marketing and sales for improved bottom line results. For this reason, PSC managers and planners with both systems skills and the ability to rethink the PSC processes are in increasing demand.

The unprecedented level of transformation presents opportunities and challenges to employers and candidates alike. Both will face challenges to remain competitive while navigating changing expectations.

Flexibility: the king of benefits

Based on the daily interviews that we conducted over the past year, it is clear that employers who offer flexible work options attract the best candidates. These options include first remote working, hybrid environments, full-time and part-time options as well as the opportunity to work on interim and freelance bases. Other key factors include work-life balance, training and development opportunities and the ability to work with inspiring management. "Excellent Compensation & Benefits" was ranked fifth in their decision criteria compared to being the first or second variable for job seekers in other European countries, according Linkedin's Employer Value Proposition study.

A closer look at company values and employer branding

With sustainability taking center stage, more and more companies dedicate time and resources to redefine their values and vision in order to match today's social and environmental context. Positions in D&l or ESG are emerging within HR teams and priorities are being set into redefining their employer branding as the company identity now plays a great role to attract candidates. This is particularly true for SMEs who struggle to attract top talent when competing with Start-ups and Blue-chip companies.

Our frontline experience also indicates that employer review sites such as Glassdoor and Kununu, are important sources of information for candidates andemployeesalike. Forthis reason, we recommendthatemployers constantly gauge and address their online reputations to ensure that they are attracting top candidates and delivering what they promise. Clearly communicating what makes them unique and why their next great hire would want to join them, will help to shore up their brands.

A new era for temporary and interim contracts

Employers across all sectors and industries seem to have identified Interim as a convenient tool to navigate the pandemic. Opportunities in project management, change management or software implementation have flourished and companies are now integrating temporary workers into their headcount as a long-term solution too.

The flexibility, fast integration, and external input they bring to the table are now perceived as valuable assets.

Interim is also becoming a career choice for many professionals in these post pandemic times. With mental health becoming a priority, some top talents choose exciting projects and moments of breaks in between assignments to focus on themselves. Alternatively, sabbaticals are becoming a sought-after benefit and companies look for interim solutions to be able to provide their permanent employees the flexibility they need.

Project or interim management work is also a way to quickly acquire and build skills. As upskilling and reskilling are now essential for employees, interim roles have become more appealing in the search of a more complete and expert CV. Project management & Interim is one of the largest categories of advertised jobs in Switzerland and grew by $35.1 \%$ between January and October 2021 (Source: Michael Page Swiss Job Index). The other goods news is that many interim jobs convert to full-time roles.

Sought-after skills and compensation packages in 2022

The 2022 job market outlook is positive but requires careful planning on the part of employers and employees to fully leverage the opportunities. To support this process, the following Michael Page salary guide outlines the most wanted positions, skills and associated compensation packages for all key sectors and over 450 roles. This will enable employers and candidates to take a fact-based approach to implementing their recruitment and career plans respectively.

FROM A CANDIDATE PERSPECTVE

SWISS CANDIDATES ARE READY FOR THE NEXT NORMAL: EMPLOYERS, ARE YOU?

While recruitment slowed down for a while during the pandemic, candidates certainly did not stop thinking about their careers, their skills, and their futures. Michael Page surveyed over 200 job applicants in whole Switzerland to discover their thoughts on the new meaning of flexibility, training & development, and why mental health is now at the forefront of any decision they make.

Upskilling & Reskilling:

Candidates are confident in their skills: $91 \%$ think that they have the right skills to compete on today's job market.

That essentially results from the fact that close to 55\% of them resorted to training since the pandemic started in order to:

Soft skills training has been a rising interest among candidates who seek to improve their relationships in the work place. The most in-demand soft skills that would benefit training according to candidates are:

Remote work and relocation:

The shift towards a more flexible workstyle is now integrated by candidates and they expect to have access to hybrid working models. They therefore look for jobs with remote working opportunities and make their decision based on the following factors:

However, $51 \%$ of candidates in Switzerland are unable to notice a new trend in remote working as part of new jobs publications.

Full remote working seems unlikely for most companies in Switzerland and relocation is still on the table.

54\% of candidates have already or would consider relocating for the following reasons:

On the other hand, those who refuse to relocate seem to be living in an environment that offer a better quality of life close to their family and friends.

Mental Health

Since the beginning for the pandemic: 60\% of employees in Switzerland experienced some kind of challenge linked to anxiety, stress, lack of motivation or sleep disturbance. Here is what they decided to do about it:

Companies however are still late in addressing this issue, only $32 \%$ of Swiss companies communicate and act upon protecting the mental health of their employees.
Candidates suggest that impactful measures would include:

Transparency and communication with Managers

Property & Construction

MARKET OVERVIEW & HIRING INSIGHTS

SECTOR TRENDS 2022

> The property sector has resisted the sanitary crisis. Overall, it is still valued as a safe investment
> New working models have led companies to reconsider their office spaces: new working models have emerged, office rentals have decreased, some offices were turned into households
> Although candidates are lacking, salary trends have been decreasing in certain sectors (Property Management & Architects Offices) to be compensated with other types of benefits
$>$ Companies in Geneva generally offer better salaries than in the rest of Romandie
> The public sector has maintained its investments in infrastructure projects and local authorities have been hiring project managers / city planners
> Despite their long time conservative approach on the topic, employers in the property sector have been moving towards more flexibility through part-time work (working at 80-90\% is now an option)
